

"Heart of a Dog" reviewed by Bev H on June 24, 2013

Updated June 25, 2013

Book Title:

Heart of a Dog

Author:

Mikhail Bulgakov

Why did you read it? Why did you finish it? Who would you recommend it to?:

If reading Mikhail Bulgakov's Heart of a Dog has taught me anything, it's that beyond Anna Karenina I don't think I'm all that into Russian literature. And...my non-love for Kafka's Metamorphosis wasn't a fluke. 'Cause, honest-to-goodness, I just didn't think this dismal little story about a dog that is turned into a man by a Russian mad scientist was all that. Yes, I do see that it's a satire on Russian Revolution. And, yes, I'm sure it's saying important and meaningful things about the lives of the people at the time. But it's just not saying them very well to me--especially once Sharik is turned into Polygraph Polygraphovich Sharikov, the lecherous and vulgar man who reads Engels and becomes the government official in charge of killing cats. Quite honestly, I much preferred Sharik's commentary on humanity while he was a canine. The best thing about this novel? It was short--which Russian literature isn't as a rule--and I was able to knock it off my TBR pile in a single afternoon. I read it for several of my online reading challenges--specifically the "Back to the Classics" challenge. No rating because I just don't think I can be fair to the book.

This is a:

book

Rate Your Read:

No votes yet

Your Review Name:

Bev H

ISBN:

9780802150592

Reviews Titles:

Heart of a dog